GRAIN EDIT

is a design blog I co-founded that focuses on mid-century modern graphic design. In addition to showcasing work from past and present, Grain Edit has quickly become a resource for industry professionals seeking upcoming and relevant talent. I contributed to the design of the site, and I post regularly about contemporary designers whose work reflects the blog's aesthetic.

is a wonderfully smart design firm. I had the opportunity to assist on a wide variety of projects, including original concept and design for identity, print-related material, and a few non-traditional art projects. Other tasks included daily blogging, office organization/management, and helping with job and project flow.

READYMADE MAGAZINE

is a very fun, artsy, D-I-Y magazine for people who like to make stuff. As an intern I helped select and test a variety of typefaces, and designed logos and icons for the magazine's recent re-design.

THE SMALL STAKES

was a super rad internship. I was able to help design for and be a part of the design/music scene that I love so much. I assisted throughout the design and printing processes—concept development, thumbnails, production, final output and screenprinting.
